1. On 5 October 1953, the occupation of the Fliegerhorst installation at Jueterbog had slightly increased. Intensive activity was observed in the barracks area and the terrain, and intensive firing practice was noted at the firing range. Vehicular traffic to and from the installation continued to be very heavy. Between 20 September and 5 October, about 150 troops daily received infantry combat training in the terrain, while other troops engaged in basic training and physical training, and, between 7:30 a.m. and 4 p.m., in firing with rifles at platoon level at the firing range. About 15 to 20 soldiers daily engaged in service of the piece drill on 3 x 76-mm field guns in the training area and driving was practiced with T-34/35 tanks [REDACTED]. On 21 September, about 350 troops, organized into four columns, left the installation toward Altes Lager. On 23 September, about 700 to 800 troops, a military band and flags were seen at a ceremony in the barracks yard. [REDACTED]

2. Between 9 p.m. and 11 p.m. on 21 September, the noise of numerous motor vehicle columns was heard in Jueterbog. At about 9 p.m. on 22 September, a column of 8 to 10 trucks, each occupied by 20 to 25 soldiers [REDACTED]; and 1 field kitchen passed through Jueterbog, proceeding toward Neumarkt Tor (gate). They were followed by individual vehicles during 23 September. At about 9:30 p.m. on 23 September, a column of 3 to 10 trucks [REDACTED] passed through Jueterbog. On 24 September, a commission arrived at the hospital and checked the German workers, who were questioned between 5 and 30 minutes. Another commission of 9 members including 2 lieutenant colonels and several majors, arrived at the hospital on 27 September, allegedly for a stay of several days. On 28 September, source determined that unusually many soldiers were hospitalized at that time. The new arrivals were accounted for by the exercise, which was under way in the Werder-Markendorf area. The Markendorf-Baruth road had been heavily damaged by tanks.<sup>2</sup>
